Attorney General Ashley Moody News Release

AG Moody, Honda Reach $85 Million Multistate Agreement

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Attorney General Ashley Moody, along with attorneys general from 47 other states and territories, today reached an agreement with American Honda Motor Co., Inc. and Honda of America Mfg., Inc. to secure payment to the states of more than $85 million. The agreement resolves allegations that Honda concealed safety issues related to defects in the frontal airbag systems installed in certain Honda and Acura vehicles sold in the United States. Takata Corporation, a long-time Honda supplier, designed and manufactured the systems with first installations in 2001 Honda model vehicles.

The proposed consent judgments filed today conclude a multistate investigation into Honda's alleged failure to inform regulators and consumers that the frontal airbags posed a significant risk of rupture. The defect can result in metal fragments flying into the passenger compartments of many Honda and Acura vehicles. To date, the ruptures have resulted in at least 14 deaths and more than 200 injuries in the U.S. alone.

Attorney General Ashley Moody said, "Floridians depend heavily on their motor vehicles in everyday life and should not be put in danger as a result of a defect from a manufacturer. Due to Honda's failure to properly ensure the complete safety of their vehicles and allegedly keeping important information from consumers, innocent lives were lost and hundreds more were injured. I commend my office and attorneys general across the nation for their work in securing the protections necessary to prevent tragedies like these in the future."

The states alleged that Honda engineers suspected the airbag propellant, ammonium nitrate, could burn aggressively and cause the inflator to burst inside the vehicles. Despite concerns, Honda delayed warning consumers or automobile safety officials, even as it began partial recalls of affected vehicles in 2008 and 2009. Further, Honda continued to assure its consumers that the vehicles were safe. Honda eventually recalled approximately 12.9 million Honda and Acura vehicles equipped with the suspect inflators dating back to 2008.

The states alleged that Honda's failures to act and misrepresentations about the safety of its vehicles were unfair and deceptive. Further, the states alleged that Honda's conduct violated state consumer protection laws, including Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act.

Under the terms of Florida's proposed consent judgment, subject to judicial review and approval in the 17th Circuit Court in Broward County, Honda agrees to strong injunctive relief, including:

- Taking steps to ensure that future airbag designs include fail-safe features to protect passengers in the event the inflator ruptures;

- Adopting changes to its procurement process for new frontal airbags, to ensure that its suppliers have the appropriate industry certifications and satisfy key industry performance standards, as well as improve record-keeping and parts tracking;
- Implementing recurrence prevention procedures designed to prevent a tragedy like this from ever happening again, such as requiring that Honda approve all new frontal airbag designs before the company will consider them for use in new Honda vehicles;
- Not employing misleading advertisements and point of sale representations regarding the safety of Honda's vehicles, including the airbags; and
- Making improvements in critical areas such as risk management, quality control, supplier oversight, training and certifications, and implementing mandatory whistleblower protections.

Honda also agreed to pay the participating attorneys general a total of more than $85 million. Florida's share is approximately $4.7 million.
