Attorney General Moody's Week In Review - May 28, 2021

The 2021 Hurricane Season starts next week, and with a possibly active season approaching, now is the time to make sure preparations are in place. Earlier this week, my office released the 2021 Hurricane Preparedness Guide—full of information about storms and tips to help Floridians get ready. Last year, we experienced a record-breaking 30 named storms, including six major hurricanes. This year, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is predicting an active season with 13 to 20 named storms developing—and six to 10 of those storms becoming hurricanes.

As Floridians, we have all seen the damage that tropical storms and hurricanes can cause. That is why, it is so important to prepare now rather than scramble later should a storm rage towards your community. Our preparedness guide can help you get ahead.

It details the latest information about major storm events, suggestions for preparing your home for a hurricane strike and tips for avoiding scams in the aftermath of destruction. The guide also features information on one of the most common consumer complaints reported during hurricane season—price gouging.

The safety of your family, pets and property may depend on the preparations you make today, so I want to urge all Floridians to use this resource to make a plan now—ahead of hurricane season.

Stay safe, Florida.
